REGULAR COLORECTAL CANCER SCREENINGS ARE IMPORTANT FOR YOU. AND THE ONES YOU LOVE.

If you're considering whether to get a colorectal cancer screening, consider who else your decision might affect. Colorectal cancer is the third-most common cancer worldwide. It's recommended that men and women with an average risk start getting screened at age 45, and those with a close relative diagnosed before age 50 start screening around age 35. Early detection can lead to longer, happier lives. For everyone.
